

Are you an Instrumentalist?

Natural ability, nerve and attuned reflexes are all essentials, but these things are common to most good drivers. Playing it by ear is fine-mostly. It's knowing exactly what's happening in there—the motor, the electrical system, transmission, every second—that counts. This feedback information can only come from professional instrumentation.... Instruments keep you in touch, get you full-time power and performance. You drive with computer precision. A Tach, for instance— gives you a split-second edge during gear change. The Engine Performance Gauge telegraphs engine problems. The Battery Condition Indicator helps side-step critical breakdowns. And Ammeters, Oil Pressure Gauges, Temperature Gauges, Vacuum Gauges—these and all the other matched-design instruments make a dash-good story....

It's like driving with a computer on your side, right?"
